

Sexual Assault Prevention for Undergraduates

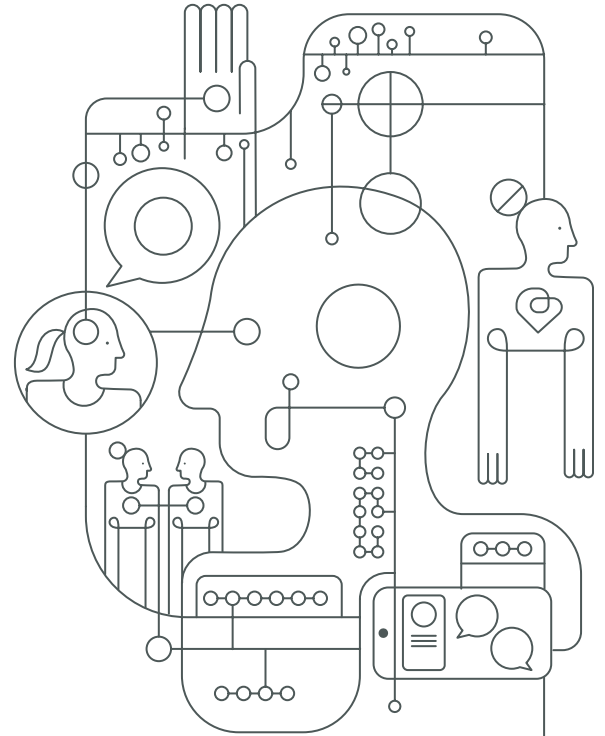

Changing the culture around sexual assault by showing incoming students how to contribute to a positive, productive, and safe campus community.

There is no higher priority for colleges and universities than to provide safe and healthy learning environments for everyone on campus. Although higher education institutions across the U.S. are implementing sexual assault prevention programs to help achieve this goal, how are they ensuring they reach all students and assessing the efficacy of these initiatives? How do they know that the resources they're allocating to these efforts are resulting in positive change and contributing to student success?

Why We're Unique

Values, Identities, and Relationships

Reflect on how college life may challenge or reinforce individual values; develop awareness and acceptance of diverse identities; and understand key characteristics of healthy relationships.

Highlights include:

- Identities and values influence our relationships and affect our awareness of and experiences with sexual abuse and violence
- Key elements of healthy relationships and ability to recognize warning signs of unhealthy relationships and abuse

Gender Identities and Stereotypes

Become more aware of how an individual's various identities can impact how they think about and experience sexual violence and abuse.

Highlights include:

- Identify gender-based/harmful language and know how to step in to help
- Ability to recognize when gender-based stereotypes negatively affect our perceptions of others

Sexual Harassment and Stalking

Recognize common types of sexual harassment and stalking on campus and understand options for addressing this kind of behavior.

Highlights include:

- How to respond if experiencing or witnessing stalking or sexual harassment
- How to step in to help a friend who may be sexually harassing or stalking someone

Consent, Coercion, and Stepping In

Acknowledge the importance of communication in healthy sexual relationships and understand ways of stepping in to stop a problematic situation from occurring or continuing to escalate.

Highlights include:

- Identify consent as a normal, natural, and expected part of healthy communication
- Recognize various forms of coercion; what coercion may look and/or sound like

Reporting Options and Responding to a Survivor

Understand how to show support to a survivor of abuse and/or assault and become familiar with campus-based and local support resources.

Highlights include:

- Understand common reactions to trauma
- Recognize that a person's identities shape their response to trauma
